Fair-weather cumulus clouds can generate a wide range of cloud fractions under seemingly similar meteorological conditions. This project aims to understand the ways in which low clouds can organize themselves and relate this to their radiative impact. The student will contribute through analysis of newly-gathered field campaign data, satellite/reanalysis data, and potentially modeling.

Paquita Zuidema pzuidema@miami.edu